Erasmus+ project ICALL showcases promising practices of inclusive communities

How can we create truly inclusive communities where everyone has the opportunity to thrive? The ICALL project aims to provide an answer to this question.

By designing the necessary tools to develop and sustain inclusive local communities, the project is ensuring persons with disabilities can live a full social life, are empowered to make their own choices, and can access all services offered to the public.

Recently, ICALL has published a Booklet collecting promising practices of inclusive communities, which explores innovative and impactful initiatives that foster inclusion across Europe. From social enterprises to digital accessibility solutions, this collection showcases real-world examples of how inclusion is being championed at the local level. Discover the strategies that are making a difference and get inspired to implement change in your own community.

The publication has been translated in the four partner countries' languages (Finnish, Greek, Hungarian, and Polish), and the translated versions can be accessed here.
